FONDS 3: WESLEYAN METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY COLLECTION. - 1791-1893. - 5.21 m of textual records. - 17 microfilm reels. - 661 microfiches.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church, established in England, was based on the teachings of John Wesley, who died in 1791; its date of creation is generally given as 1795, when the Wesleyans separated from The Church of England.

The British Wesleyan missions commenced in Newfoundland in 1765 or 1766; in the Maritimes in 1799 (replacing the American connection); and in Lower and Upper Canada after the War of 1812-1814, establishing themselves as far west as Niagara and St. Catharines by 1820. In the meantime, by 1817, the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society had been formally established, assuming responsibility for missionary work around the world, including British North America.

Problems over jurisdiction in the Canadas between the American Methodist Episcopal and British Wesleyans resulted in an agreement reached in 1820 whereby Lower Canada was allotted to the British Wesleyans (with the exception of the east side of the Ottawa River), and Upper Canada to the American Methodists (with the exception of Kingston). Lower Canada, after 1841 Canada East (Quebec), was organized as a District under the direction of the Missionary Society in 1817 and remained so until 1854, when it formally united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada already in existence in Canada West (Ontario).

British Wesleyans were ready to return to Upper Canada by the early 1830s. A union between the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada and the British Wesleyans in 1833 in the establishment of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada averted conflict between the two groups (but resulted in the establishment of another Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada, 1834-1883/Fonds 6). This union, moreover, extended the control which the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society had in Upper Canada: to have final say on appointment of all Canadian Wesleyan ministers, most of the funds raised for missions, and appointment of a Superintendent of Missions. This and other divisive issues forced the dissolution of the union between 1840 and 1847. After the reunion in 1847, Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society began to withdraw from significant responsibility for mission work in Canada West and in British North America generally, although money for the work here continued to be provided.

The first British Wesleyan missionary to be appointed among Canada's Aboriginal People was Thomas Turner in 1832; his mission bordered the St. Clair River in Upper Canada. In the late thirties, missions opened on the shores of Lakes Superior and Huron and after 1840 in Hudson's Bay Company territory. The Hudson's Bay Missions were administered directly from Britain until 1854 when they too became the responsibility of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada.

Collection consists primarily of records concerning mission work in Ontario (Upper Canada/Canada West) and Quebec (Lower Canada/Canada East) and the Maritimes in three overlapping series which include minutes and other records of mission areas in Canada, 1814-1867; and correspondence from missionaries, statesmen, lay leaders, and others in these mission areas, Hudson's Bay lands and British Columbia, 1791-1893. There is also some correspondence from places outside Canada.

Collection consists of the following series: 1) Records of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society – North America (1791-1883), 2) Correspondence from Missionaries, Statesmen, Lay Readers and Others in Mission Areas (1791-1893), 3) Minutes, Reports and Correspondence of Society's Work in Canada (1814-1867).

TO FIND A LETTER:

1. Letters are divided according to their "Date" and "Place of Writing". Hence, materials are classified first, according to the year in which they were written, and secondly, according to the ecclesiastical division (i.e. the Methodist District or Conference) in which the "Place of Writing" lay. In later years, materials are divided only according to the Church (i.e. The Wesleyan Methodist Church (Great Britain); The Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada; or The Wesleyan Methodist Church of Eastern British America) from which the particular item was sent. All correspondence from "Sundry Places" (i.e. places outside of present day Canada) is filed under the label, "The Wesleyan Methodist Church (Great Britain)". Correspondence from Sundry Places. 18---.* Whether or not the author of any given letter was associated with one or another of the Wesleyan divisions in no way determines the file in which the researcher will find the letter. All letters have been filed according to their "Place of Writing", and the ecclesiastical district of which that "Place of Writing" (Not the Author) is a part.

Example:

Suppose a letter written by the Rev. Egerton Ryerson, dated Montreal, August, 1842 is sought by the researcher. Ryerson, at that time was a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada (i.e. Canada West), a body which in 1842 was not associated with the Wesleyan Methodist Church (Great Britain)® In that year, Dr. Ryerson himself, lived and worked in Toronto, Canada West, while Montreal was a city in Canada East. Nevertheless, the letter would be found in the "Canada: Eastern District, 1842" file, because it was written from Montreal, and because Montreal lay in the "Canada: Eastern District".

2. When you are searching for letters from a particular province or region, remember that there were many changes in the titles of the Districts. The titles of the Districts in the Eastern Provinces had slight variations on an almost regular basis. As well, some settlements located in one political region may have been part of a different ecclesiastical district. At one time, for example, Montreal and Quebec City, were part of the Nova Scotia District; for many years two or three circuits in the province of Nova Scotia were part of the New Brunswick District. Prince Edward (or Edward's) Island was for the greatest portion of the period covered, a part of the Nova Scotia District; for a short time, however, it was part of the New Brunswick District, and at other times, a District of its own, or in conjunction with Nova Scotia East. Cape Breton suffered a similar fate.
3. When you are looking for letters from a particular author, check the indexes for all districts. On occasion a missionary based in Upper or Lower Canada* wrote a letter from Halifax or New York before he embarked on an ocean voyage. As well, many men moved from District to District within a calendar year. Many mission reports on work done among Canadian Indians, or other groups, were sent from Toronto, or Montreal, places other than the Indian settlements or mission stations from which the actual work emanated.
4. When you are looking for letters written during a certain Conference year, you will have to check the files for two calendar years. The Methodist Conference year varied slightly, but usually ran from July of one year to June of the next. Because some missionaries were slow in moving to their new stations, also some missionaries failed to appear at their new station, and because the Conference year did vary, the letters have been classified according to the calendar year in which they were written.
5. If you are doubtful about the District in which a particular town or settlement was situated, you can discover this by checking the Minutes of Conference Of The Wesleyan Methodist Church (Great Britain) for the year(s) concerned. The headings and divisions cited in the Minutes of Conference have in all cases determined the District names, divisions of Circuits, etc., used on the file labels of this collection.

6. The headings used in the indexes convey the following information:

AUTHOR: The name of the person who wrote the item.

PLACE OF WRITING: The town or settlement from which the item was written and/or sent.

DISTRICT,

CONFERENCE: The ecclesiastical District or Conference in which the Town or Settlement was situated. Both "District" and "Conference" are terms of reference used by the Methodists.

DATE: The date on which the item was written.

MICROFILM NO.: The Number of the roll of microfilm from which the photocopy of the item was taken. Where possible, the frame number on the roll is also noted. Rolls 1a to 10 have all letters numbered; Rolls 11 to 27 have no numbered letters. For purposes of confirmation of readings, in the case of very poor copies, or for purposes of cross reference, the researcher may locate the desired item on the roll indicated.

SUNDRY PLACES: This heading "Correspondence from Sundry Places" which appears as the title of certain files, indicates a group of letters, reports, etc., which originated outside the bounds of present day Canada. Several of the items included in these files were written by ministers connected with Canadian Conferences while they were out of the country. Others were written by American churchmen, British Churchmen, political figures, or others.

D

- Roll 22: The whole of the roll appears to be very poorly microfilmed.

Roll 24: A few letters from the roll need redoing.

Roll 26: A good portion of the roll is of poor quality.

The following items appear to be missing from the collection:

Correspondence from Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, or Canada, prior to 1804.

Correspondence from Canada (all regions) is very meager in the years following 1867.

There is minimal correspondence for the years noted:

For the year 1805,	We have no correspondence for the months July -December.
" " " 1806,	we have only 3 letters.

" " " 1810,	" " no letters

In addition, there are very few sets of minutes in the collection, whether District, Circuit, or Conference Minutes. Possibly these are kept separately in the Methodist Archives, Lodon.

Wesleyan Methodist Church (Great Britain)

Foreign Missions: America
The British Dominions in North America

In 1769, two Methodist ministers, Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmoor, travelled from London to New York. Carrying with them the blessing of John Wesley and a grant of £50 from the Methodist Conference, these two men constituted the first missionary enterprise formally sponsored by the Methodist Conference of Great Britain. In subsequent years the mission to North America expanded, and in 1785, Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury were appointed joint Superintendents of Methodist work in America. A committee to assist Thomas Coke in his work was set up by Conference, first in 1795, then more "authoritatively" in 1804.

Although Thomas Coke and Thomas Parker had proposed to Conference in 1784 a "Plan of the Society for the Establishment of Missions among the Heathen", it was not until 1790 that evident concern for missions was manifested. In that year a "Committee for the Management of our West Indian Affairs" was formed by the Conference. The first Methodist Missionary Society, however, did not begin to function until 1813, the year in which the "Methodist Missionary Society of Leeds District" was constituted. The rules of this organization provided for the creation of "Auxiliary Missionary Societies" or Branch Societies in every circuit of the District. Other Districts followed suit. In 1815, Jabez Bunting proposed a "New Constitution" for the management of missionary affairs, and with the cause becoming an increasing priority in the minds of the Wesleyans, a society encompassing the whole of the English Conference was founded in 1817 with a full code of "Laws and Regulations", under the title, the "General Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society". Although mission work was given a new impetus by the formation of this society, it should be noted that it was the Methodist missions themselves which gave rise to the Missionary Society, and not the reverse.

Missionary Notices, a publication which conveyed mission news to Methodists, was first published in London in 1816; this journal proved very popular with the laity and was instrumental in awakening among them an enthusiasm for missions. Much of the material which was published in these "notices" was taken from the letters sent to the mission secretaries in London from the missionaries on the field. Hence, portions of the correspondence found in this collection were extracted and printed in the Missionary Notices over the years.

What follows is an outline of the development of Wesleyan Methodist missions within the bounds of present day Canada, from their beginning to 1855. By 1855 all Methodist bodies in Canada had gained complete autonomy, and their missions were totally independent of the parent conference in England.

NEWFOUNDLAND

Four years before Boardman and Pilmoor sailed for New York, a protégé of Wesley, Laurence Coughlan, travelled on his own initiative to Newfoundland, to preach the Gospel to the long-neglected people of this old British colony. Arriving in 1765, Coughlan continued to work on the island until 1773; he returned to London once during this period, in 1767, to be ordained a priest of the Church of England by the Bishop of London. Still, Coughlan maintained that he was yet a Methodist, and he continued to conduct class meetings.

Bishop Coke of the Methodist Episcopal Church, although asked by Wesley to visit Newfoundland, failed to reach the island during his lifetime, and for some time the region was without Methodist leadership. John McCreary was appointed Methodist itinerant on the island in 1790, by the English Conference, and one year later his spirit was lifted when William Black, Presiding Elder of Nova Scotia, visited the colony. Black had been given charge over missionary work in the northern colonies by Thomas Coke, at the American Conference of 1790, held in Philadelphia.

After 1800 missionaries were appointed by the British and Irish Conferences to Newfoundland, and the island was considered a direct responsibility of the English Wesleyan Mission Committee. By 1808, three itinerants worked in the colony, and by 1812, four. Gradually new circuits were formed, and numbers grew. While the first circuits bordering Conception Bay continued to be the strongest on the island, new chapels were built in St. John's, Bonavista, and other settlements. When the Missionary Society was created in Great Britain in the years 1813-1817, the mission staff in Newfoundland gained much needed reinforcement. Two men replaced one missionary in 1814, and two more were added in 1815. In the latter year, William Ellis was appointed the first Chairman of the Newfoundland District. The number of ministerial staff remained virtually unchanged during the next forty years, and the circuits already served were built up and extended as their numbers warranted it.

Among the early Methodist missionaries on the island, the following were the most prominent: John McGreary, George Smith, William Thoresby, James Bulpitt, John Remington, William Ellis, Samuel McDowell, Sampson Busby, John Lewis, John Pickavant, James and Thomas Hickson.

NOVA SCOTIA, NEW BRUNSWICK, and PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

In the 1770's a group of Yorkshire farmers settled in Cumberland County, in Nova Scotia, on lands bordering the present day province of New Brunswick. The greater part of these folk were Wesleyans, and although they lacked clerical leadership, they held regular prayer and class meetings in their homes, according to Wesley's design. The William Black family was one of this group. Additional Methodists streamed into the eastern province in the 1780's, United Empire Loyalists, exiles from the new Republic to the south. A good proportion of this group were negroes in transit to the "free" colony of Sierra Leone.

The second son of the above-mentioned Black family, also named William, proved to be the real father of Methodism in the province. As early as 1780, young Black began exhorting in local home-meetings, and in the same year he and two other young men began a regular plan of preaching in settlements near Amherst. By the summer of 1781, two hundred people were meeting regularly in Methodist classes in the area. By June, 1782, Black had extended his circuit to include Halifax.

In 1785 when Coke and Asbury were appointed Superintendents of the work in America by John Wesley, the Methodist leader anticipated that these two men would direct all Wesleyan Missions in North America. When Nova Scotian leaders, William Black and Robert Barry, wrote to Wesley in 1782 and 1784 respectively, pleading for additional missionaries for the province, Wesley in his reply, urged them to consult with Coke on the matter. Hence Black presented his request to Coke at the "Christmas Conference" in Baltimore in 1784 and the American Superintendent promised that help would be forthcoming.

In 1785 Freeborn Garretson and James Oliver Cromwell journeyed north from the United States to begin their ministry in the colony of Nova Scotia. They, along with Black and John Mann were the only circuit appointees for the year. The four were joined by a fifth American, John Mann, in 1786. In the same year in Halifax, the first "Conference" was held in the province; sixth itinerant, William Grandin was added to the ranks at that meeting. The "Conference" once again approached Wesley with requests for additional workers, and hearing the repeated cry from these Nova Scotian missionaries, Wesley finally ordained James Wray, Superintendent of the Nova Scotia district in 1788. Through want of tact, Wray found his office untenable, and although he continued to serve in Nova Scotia for a few years, he resigned within a few months from the office of Superintendent. At the American Conference of 1789, William Black -- who along with James and John Mann had been ordained at that Conference -- was designated "Presiding Elder" in Wray's stead.

1791 saw six new preachers appointed to the district. One of these, John Bishop, was sent to New Brunswick; the first Wesleyan itinerant in the province, he based his mission in the city of St. John. In the same year Duncan McColl began his ministry at St. Stephen, New Brunswick. McColl, Grandin, and James Mann were appointed itinerants in New Brunswick in 1793.

In 1792, William Grandin had established a mission on Prince Edward Island (then St. John's Island) at Tryon. The first regular appointment of a Methodist itinerant to the island, however, was not made until 1807 when James Bulpitt landed at Murray Harbour.

By 1799, it was evident to Black that the American branch of Methodism was not supplying the Maritimes with a sufficient number of missionaries. Consequently Black went to England to seek recruits. The fruits of that visit determined that from the year 1800 onward, Methodist missions in Eastern British America would be an integral part of the mission programme of the British Conference. For the next fifty-five years, all work in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and adjacent islands, was directed by the Methodist authorities in London and/or their appointees in the province.

CONNEXIONAL ORGANIZATION IN EASTERN BRITISH AMERICA.

In the year 1807, the District of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (including Newfoundland) was recorded for the first time in the Minutes of Conference (Great Britain), as a separate "District"; William Black was designated Chairman of the District. The title of the district was altered to "Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland" in 1810, but reverted to its original form in 1813 when Newfoundland was noted as a separate district. William Ellis was appointed first superintendent of Newfoundland District in 1815. Through the years 1815 to 1817, the District was designated "Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada District". In 1817 "The Canadas" became a distinct region. 1812 saw the name change once again to "Nova Scotia District". New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island remained a part of this District until 1825 when they were set apart as a separate "New Brunswick District". In 1826 Prince Edward's Island was recognized as a distinct part of the Nova Scotia District. In the divisions adopted by the English Conference, ecclesiastical followed political boundaries with one exception: the Annapolis Valley at the east end of the Bay of Fundy, politically a part of Nova Scotia, was placed under the jurisdiction of the New Brunswick District.

EXTENSION OF THE WORK

In 1829 missionaries began work on Cape Breton Island; Matthew Cranswick was the first appointed. There were two appointments made in 1829, one to Sydney and one to Ships's Harbour (later Port Hawkesbury). From the outset of the work on the island in 1829, Cape Breton was designated a distinct part of the Nova Scotia District.

Immigration increased dramatically in the years after 1814 and circuit appointments in general kept pace with the new settlement. In 1821 and 1822 Wesleyan work was extended northeastward in Nova Scotia to Guysborough County, and in 1832, the Fredericton circuit moved northwestward toward Woodstock, New Brunswick. In 1840 the first Maritime Methodist institution for higher learning, the Sackville Academy (later called Mount Allison) was established at Sackville, New Brunswick; a separate but related academy for women was opened at Sackville in 1854. Another Connexional concern, the "Wesleyan Book Depot" was opened in Halifax in 1840.

Some of the more outstanding of the Methodist ministers in the Maritimes in the early period of the work were: Stephen Bamford, William Bennett and Joshua Marsden, in New Brunswick, Thomas Dawson and Joseph Avar, in Prince Edward Island.

In the late 1840's and early 1850's, the weakened condition of Wesleyan Methodism in Great Britain caused a devolution of mission work abroad. Consequently, Methodist work in the Eastern provinces continued at the level established in 1839, for the next fifteen years.

In 1855, John Beecham, successor to Jabez Bunting as Senior Secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, visited all the District Meetings of Eastern British America (except Newfoundland), and urged the ministers and leaders of the region to accept independence from the parent body. A plan for the creation of an autonomous Methodist connexion to direct all Methodist work in the Maritimes was drawn up. There was little resistance to the proposal; Newfoundland seemed the least inclined to accept it. Consequently, with Dr. Beecham in the chair, a new Conference met in Halifax, July 17, 1855. Matthew Richey was elected Co-delegate and William Temple was elected Secretary. As soon as Beecham returned to England, Richey was thereby made Acting-President. The new Conference was divided into seven new districts. Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Fredericton, Sackville, Annapolis, and Newfoundland (Bermuda was part of the Halifax District).

Seventy-nine ministers served seventy circuits in the Conference, and membership numbered 13,136 at the time the new church was founded. The Conference adopted the name, "The Wesleyan Methodist Church or Connexion of Eastern British America."

THE CANADAS

Methodism appeared in several distinct regions of Canada (known as Quebec before 1791) almost simultaneously. Officially, Paul and Barbara Heck are credited with bringing Wesley's brand of Christianity to the colony. Palestine Loyalists, the Hecks, accompanied by the widow of Philip Embury, and her second husband established themselves on farm^alands in Augusta Township on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. It was here, in 1780, that the first Methodist class meetings were held, under the supervision of Barbara Heck.

In Quebec City, through the years 1780-1784, a Methodist army officer named Tuffey, preached to the troops in the military base there. And in 1786, another officer, Major George Neal, functioned as a local preacher in settlements near Niagara Falls. As well two American Methodist exhorters worked in 1788 in regions bordering the eastern end of Lake Ontario, James Lyons at Adolphustown, and James McCarty at Kingston.

The first "official" itinerant preacher to travel in Canada was William Losee, a man encouraged by Freeborn Garrettson to "range at large in Canada" through the winter of 1789-90. Losee met the followers of McCarty and Lyons, and the Palatines at Augusta, and in 1790, the New York Conference appointed him the first regular missionary to Canada. In 1791 organized Methodism began in the province when Losee settled at Adolphustown on the Bay of Quinte and established a circuit in the area. He was joined in his work a year later by another American preacher, Darius Dunham. In 1796 Dunham was designated "Presiding Elder" of the District, and by 1804, two missionaries served on six circuits in Canada: Bay of Quinte, Oswegotchie (Kingston), Ottawa, Niagara, Long Point, and Home District (York). A new circuit was in the process of being formed on the Thames River. In the following year the first Methodist Camp Meeting was held in Canada under the direction of two American ministers, Henry Ryan and William Case.

1804 also saw Bishop Asbury appoint the first preacher to Montreal. By 1806 a Lower Canada District was formed; it was composed of three circuits: Montreal, Quebec and Ottawa. Two other circuits in the Lower Province, Stanstead and Dunham, were associated with American districts of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

With the outbreak of war in 1812, between Great Britain and the United States, relations between Canada and the United States became strained. Thus, by 1814, of five men appointed to Lower Canada, only one continued his mission in the province. In 1812, three months before the war began, an appeal for a minister from England was sent from Montreal. The letter stated there was a "dissatisfaction felt with American Preachers". Two years later John Strong and Richard Williams were sent by the British Conference to Quebec and Montreal respectively. They worked under the superintendency of the Nova Scotia Chairman.

With the close of the war, the American itinerants returned to the Lower Canada, expecting to resume their circuits. The trustees of the Montreal Chapel, meanwhile, had turned over the pulpit to the British Wesleyan preacher. In 1815, there was a deadlock between the two parties, and Henry Ryan proceeded to hurl insults at the British missionary. At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1816, William Black and William Bennett, from Nova Scotia, were received as delegates, and they attempted to explain the British presence in Lower Canada. Still, the American Conference refused to withdraw from the Canadian field. Meanwhile the British Conference "in the ardour attending the Missionary Society's birth" (p. 379, F. & H.) added four additional missionaries to the two already appointed to Lower Canada. By 1817 the British Conference counted seven circuits in the Canadas with nine missionaries attending them. In the interim, circuits had been formed at Kingston and Cornwall in Upper Canada, and several small settlements in the lower province.

In 1819, realizing the undesirability of inter-connexional strife, the Missionary Committee in London forbade its men in Canada to "continue their labours in stations previously occupied by the American brethren, except when the population is so large or scattered that it is evident a considerable proportion of them must be neglected". (p. 383, F. & H.). The resolution had little effect on mission operations in the colony. Consequently the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of 1820, sent John Emory as a delegate to the English Conference to present in person the argument against the creation or existence of rival Methodist congregations in one area. The Conference had, prior to Emory's departure from the United States, reasserted its jurisdiction over "our societies in the Canadas -- all except Quebec".

The Missionary Committee in London was convinced by Emory's arguments; Emory had assured the British of the loyalty to Britain of all Methodist ministers appointed to Upper Canada, and had pointed to a law which had been added to the American Book of Discipline which stressed that it was "the duty of Christians, and especially Christian ministers, to be subject to the supreme authority of the country where they reside, and to use all laudable means to enjoin obedience to the powers that be". (p. 387, F. & H.). As a result of Emory's efforts, the Missionary Committee resolved that "Upper Canada should be left in the exclusive possession of the American brethren, and Lower Canada in the exclusive possession of our missionaries". (p. 387, F. & H.). This agreement was approved at the next British Conference, and, retaining only the station in the military settlement of Kingston, the Wesleyans withdrew all of their missionaries from grounds previously occupied in Upper Canada.

Despite efforts by leaders of both Connexions to bring about this change smoothly, disruption occurred, and great discontent was shown by the British Wesleyans of Upper Canada. With immigration continuing from Britain, the dissatisfaction of British Methodists in the upper province continued to be relayed to the British Conference through the decade which followed. Many petitions from scattered groups of "British Wesleyans" and sympathizers, asking for the return of British Wesleyan ministers to the province, were delivered to the Missionary Committee in London. It was only a matter of time until the English body would feel compelled to respond to these persistent pleadings.

LOWER CANADA

In the years following the 1820 agreement, missions in Lower Canada (later Canada East) were continued under the direction of the Missionary Committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference in England. All ministers or missionaries in the District received their appointments, not from the Canadian, but from the British Conference. The separation of work in the two provinces continued until 1855 when Lower Canada's Methodists joined with the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada to create one unified Canadian Conference.

In 1820 the District had nine circuits and nine ministers, and counted 744 members. A tenth preacher, John de Putron, was appointed to the French Mission; this early effort in French Evangelism was soon after abandoned.

Because of the hostile climate, or perhaps because of insufficient response to their evangelistic efforts, Wesleyan missionaries seldom remained in the District for long periods of time. Most moved to other Wesleyan mission fields or returned to England.

There were exceptions. One missionary who was appointed to the province in 1823, Joseph Stinson, played a prominent part in the evolution of Canadian Methodism. Stinson served both in Montreal and Kingston and early established a friendship with the Canadian Methodist leader, John Ryerson. He was instrumental in working out the terms of union of 1833 between Canadian and British connexions, and served as President of the Canada Conference in the years 1839-1841, and 1858-1862. Other English itinerants who made significant contributions to Methodism in Lower Canada in the early years included John Hick, Richard Williams, Matthew Lang, William Squire, Robert Alder, William Burt, James Knowlan, and Richard and Henry Pope.

Despite setbacks, there was significant growth in several of the rural circuits in Lower Canada. In some year, St. Armand, Stanstead, Shefford, or Odelltown counted the highest circuit membership in the District. William Squire, who worked in the province for many years, was largely responsible for any growth in numbers which did occur in the decade 1820-1830. He conducted revival meetings throughout the province, and the first camp-meeting in the province was held under his direction. A mission to the Indians of the Montreal area was also begun in this period. By 1834, Methodists in the Lower Canada District numbered 2,203.

Through the thirties and forties, many unresolved tensions between the Missionary Committee in London, and the Methodists of Lower Canada, continued to hamper work in the District. Findly and Holdsworth note in their history of Wesleyan Missions, that correspondence of this period between "Mission House and the colonies ... (was) marked by authoritativeness, and by touches of asperity on the part of the former that must have been painful and vexations to sensitive missionaries". (p. 392, F. & H.). For example, Lower Canadian Methodism was directly affected by the union of 1833. Although the Eastern District was shy of being a party to the union, the Mission Committee in London made it an integral part of the new Conference. The Lower Canada District, while not officially absorbed by the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, was joined with it in fact, in the years 1834 to 1837 through the double-appointment of William Lord as President of the Canada Conference and Chairman of the Lower Canada District. This was done despite the near unanimous opposition of the Methodists of Lower Canada to union with the Canadian Methodist Episcopal. In 1837, the Mission Committee finally realized the validity of the opposition forces in the Lower province, and appointed different men to the two posts.

The disputes of 1840 between British and Canadian Wesleyans only indirectly affected the work in Lower Canada. 1,600 Methodists of Upper Canada joined with a few ministers of the Western province, and withdrew from the Canadian Conference; they placed themselves, with the Methodists of Lower Canada, under the direction of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, London. The Wesleyan, a bi-weekly newspaper began publication in the same year in Montreal; it served British Wesleyans of both Canadian provinces.

In the 1840's the Methodists of Canada East (formerly Lower Canada) experienced several interesting phenomena. A few Methodists were lost to the Millerite Movement, a millenarian sect, in 1842 and 1843, but most returned to the fold after the apocalypse failed to arrive in '43. In 1844 a new St. James' Street Methodist Church was opened in Montreal. The new structure had a seating capacity of 2,000 and was hailed as the largest Protestant church in British North America. A new beginning at French Evangelism was made in 1843 by Benjamin Slight at St. John's, Canada East, and in the same year fire destroyed two-thirds of the buildings in Quebec City. ~~Not until 1851 were the Methodists of that settlement able to reconstruct their first chapel.~~

In the years following 1846, Wesleyan numbers dwindled in the province.

This was caused partly by the reduction of mission grants from the Missionary Society in London, but more by the French "colonization" of townships and counties previously settled by English-speaking farmers, and the simultaneous emigration of these "English" families to other regions. John Borland, District Secretary for Lower Canada in 1851 wrote:

The French population are swarming into our midst, while many of those speaking the English language are going westwards. It is indeed a serious question whether the Lord can bless us according to our needs and desires, while practically neglecting so large a portion of those amongst whom we sojourn. (p. 403, F. & H.).

Though Eastern Canadian Methodists continued to be shy of identifying their cause with the aggressive brand of Methodism expounded in Canada West, a formal notice from the Missionary Committee, London, that it "must decline further responsibility for their work beyond the continuance for a few years to come of a diminishing pecuniary grant", accelerated the movement toward union between the two bodies of Methodists. (p. 404, F. & H.). In 1854, Enoch Wood, then president of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, and Chairman of the Canada: Eastern District, succeeded in gaining a unanimous vote from ministers and lay officials of Canada East, in favour of union with the Upper Canadian Conference. In that year, the Eastern District added nearly 4,000 members in twenty-four circuits, and twenty-four ministers to the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada. In 1855, three districts -- Montreal, Quebec, and Stanstead -- replaced the one Canada East District, replaced the one Canada East District, and thirty-four ministers were appointed to thirty-four circuits in the Eastern province.

UPPER CANADA: DOMESTIC AND INDIAN

In the years which followed, the 1820 agreement, Upper Canada remained a part of the Genesee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States until 1824 when the Canada Conference of that church was formed. This court remained a part of the American Church until 1828 when, after permission was gained from the General Conference, the Methodists of Upper Canada established themselves as a body independent and separate from both American and English Conference. The British Wesleyans, who, as noted previously, were anxious to respond to the requests received from Upper Canada for Wesleyan missionaries, considered that this step taken by the Canada Conference had terminated the agreement of 1820, which they considered a pact between American (not Canadian!) and British Methodists. James Townley, a Mission Secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, London, notified the Canada Conference of the British intentions.

In 1831, George Ryerson was sent to Great Britain by the Canadian Conference, as a representative of an "Interdenominational Committee of Religious Liberty". Peter Jones, an Indian missionary from Canada, accompanied him. When Jones presented himself to the officials at the Wesleyan Mission House in London he was told that he would not be "allowed to utilize the English missionary platforms for the Canadian missions. However, a grant of £300 on this account was offered him on behalf of the Missionary Society on condition that he should be at its disposal during his sojourn in the country". (p. 423, F. & H.). He accepted the terms and proceeded to tour the country on behalf of Canadian Indian missions. Jones' missionary tales brought scores of offers of financial assistance into the London offices. "The British missionary leaders saw a new and promising field opened to them, which, as they judged, the Canadian Church could imperfectly occupy". (p. 423, F. & H.). They interpreted the appeal for assistance from Jones, as an acknowledgement of Canadian insufficiency.

Fortified by the promise of Government grants from Westminster in support of their mission ventures, the Missionary Committee of the English Connexion sent overtures to the Canadian Missionary Board asking that all Indian Mission enterprises be transferred from Canadian to English hands. Dr. Townley's communique, issued at the same time, stated bluntly that English Wesleyanism "held itself free to send missionaries to any part of the colonies in which it judged them to be needed. Added to these statements made in 1832, was a notice issued by Robert Alder from London in May of the same year, addressed to John Ryerson, President of the Canadian Missionary Board. It asserted that the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society had -

"determined to resume work in Upper Canada, and that he, with twelve missionaries, would in the course of a few days sail from England on this mission". (p. 424, F. & H.).

Ryerson later recounted that "this announcement, and the appointments actually made, were to us (i.e. the Canadian Church) like thunderclaps".

Looking for a way to avert a collision of competing Methodist bodies, the Methodist Episcopal Church ^{of} Canada proposed that there be a union of Canadian and British forces. Peter Jones, now returned from England, made the proposal more palatable by his sympathetic address on the reception accorded him by English Wesleyans. In his report to the Canadian Conference in June, 1832, Jones maintained that English Methodists were most kindly disposed toward their Canadian brothers. Thus, guided by John and Egerton Ryerson, the Canadian church agreed to articles of union between the two connexions, the terms of which had been drawn up by Robert Alder and Joseph Stinson in conjunction with the Ryersons.

In addition to their changing the government, and, to a lesser extent, the discipline of the Canadian body from American to British practice, the articles of union made the appointment of the president of the Conference of the new church, the prerogative of the English Connexion, made the Canadian Missionary Board an auxiliary of the British Society, and established that the English Missionary Committee would have the final say on the appointment of all Canadian Wesleyan ministers to their circuits. In addition, all moneys raised in Canada for missions were to be remitted to the London treasurers. The Canadian Missionary Board, however, did retain responsibility for the allocation of mission grants to the several mission stations in Canada.

The British Conference gave its assent to the terms of union in 1833 with the added stipulation that "in order to facilitate stationing in Canada, a Superintendent of Missions should be appointed from England". (p. 427, F. & H.).

The Canadian Conference accepted this amendment in the same year. Meeting in Upper Canada in 1833, the Canadian Methodist court greeted George Marsden as its appointed president, and Joseph Stinson as the new Superintendent of Missions. Unfortunately, there occurred a division in the ranks, and some dissident Methodist Episcopal ministers and laymen withdrew from the union to form a continuing "Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada" in 1834. The major cause of the controversy was the proposed cessation of the practice of ordaining local preachers. While such had been the custom in Canadian Methodism, it had never been a part of English Wesleyan Methodism, and the terms of union specified that no local preachers (or local elders) would be ordained after the union. In the years that followed, the question of Canadian Methodist involvement in politics, and the issue of Methodist rights further divided the united Conference. A leading but divisive figure in these matters was Egerton Ryerson, long the editor of the Canadian Methodist journal, The Christian Guardian. Animosities on the two sides grew over a period of seven years, and by 1839 the British Missionary Committee felt it necessary to send Robert Alder on a return voyage to Canada in order that he might quiet the Canadian Methodist exponents of colonial liberalism. His visit served only to hasten the inevitable schism, and in 1840 the British Conference withdrew from, and, thereby, dissolved the union of the two Methodist connexions.

INDIAN MISSIONS

One is given a hint of the path which Methodist and other Christian missions to the North American Indian peoples would take by the picture on the seal of the Massachusetts Bay Company, founded in 1629. On that seal, an American Indian is pictured, uttering the invitation, "Come over and Help us"! (p. 443, F. & H.). When Peter Jones visited England on a missionary tour in 1831, he too was reported as saying to his hearers, "Come to Canada and help my people". British Wesleyan zeal for missions among the Canadian Indians virtually began with Jones' visit to England in 1831. Three years earlier, the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society had been offered a grant of £900 by the Colonial Office in London for in London for this purpose, but no missionary was appointed to Indian work by the Conference in England until 1832.

The first recorded contact with the Canadian Indian by a Methodist minister occurred in 1801. Joseph Sawyer, a Methodist Episcopal itinerant, while preaching at Stoney Creek, Upper Canada, noticed an Indian woman present in his audience. The woman and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Jones, presented themselves as candidates for baptism on that occasion, and they brought with them a young relative of Mrs. Jones who was baptized with them and who adopted the name of the minister -- Joseph Sawyer. The couple were also the parents of the above mentioned native evangelist, Peter Jones.

Twenty years later, in 1821, at the Genesee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Indian affairs were discussed and a Committee was established to consider the matter of Indian evangelism. In the same year, Alvin Torry, a Methodist preacher appointed to the Lyons' Creek circuit in Upper Canada, made extensive contacts with Indians of the Six Nations Reserve on the Grand River. In the following year the Conference designated Torry as Missionary to the Canadian Indians. William Case, who over the years had been appointed Presiding Elder of the Niagara and Bay of Quinte Districts, had, from the outset of Indian work, shown concern for the evangelization of Canada's native peoples. At the Conference of 1828, Case resigned as Presiding Elder and accepted the post of General Superintendent of the Indian Missions of Upper Canada.

In both the Eastern provinces and Canada other denominations had worked among the Indian groups before the Methodists. In the Maritimes, the Roman Catholics, and in Upper Canada, the Anglicans (to a very limited extent) had established causes among some of the native peoples. Hence, it is not surprising to learn that in 1827 the Church of England, through its spokesman, John Strachan, sought to assume direction of the visibly successful Methodist mission at the Credit River in Upper Canada. Strachan offered "remunerative posts" to Peter Jones and his colleagues, John Sunday and Peter Jacobs, if they would become Anglican priests. Strachan failed in his attempts, however, and the Credit and other missions remained under Methodist jurisdiction.

In 1816 the British Conference made its first overture in Indian missions in North America. In 1815, a letter printed in the Methodist Magazine, written by a "military gentleman" from Halifax Nova Scotia, sought the aid of the Wesleyans in educating the aborigines of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In the following year the Missionary Society urged its missionaries in these provinces to make contacts with Indians in their vicinity. Again in 1820, the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society suggested that its Newfoundland staff "make inquiries as to the establishment of a mission to the opposite coast of Labrador". (p. 479, F. & H.). Not until 1826 was a permanent station established at Labrador, and then it continued only until 1828. The mission was revived on a small scale thirty years later by the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Eastern British America. Despite these scattered attempts at evangelism in 1816, and 1828, no lasting mission to the Indians of the region was ever established by the Wesleyans.

Thomas Turner was the first missionary appointed by the English Conference to work among Canada's native peoples. Turner was sent in 1832 to the areas bordering the St. Clair River in Upper Canada, and two years later six more recruits arrived to reinforce the Indian and Domestic missions of that province. Five of these men were assigned to Indian work, one to Domestic.

The growth of these missions was to a great extent the result of efforts made by Joseph Stinson. Stinson, who had been appointed Superintendent of Missions in the Canadian Conference at the time of the union in 1833, continued in his post until the disruption of 1840. The feuding which followed the schism hurt the mission efforts of the Wesleyans, in a time when Anglican and Roman Catholic missionaries were expanding their work with native groups. When the English Conference, and some sympathetic Canadian Wesleyans, withdrew from the union in 1840, William Case, Thomas Hurlburt, James Evans, John Sunday, and a majority of the Indian workers did likewise. Peter Jones, however, remained with the Ryersons in the Canadian Conference.

In the late thirties, Hurlburt, Evans, Sunday, and Jacobs had pushed further into the northwest regions of Canada, and opened missions on the shores of Lake Superior and Lake Huron. They had thereby laid the groundwork for the announcement which appeared in the Annual Report of the Missionary Society, London, of 1840, which proposed that missionaries commence work in the Hudson's Bay Territory. Such an undertaking had been encouraged by the Hudson's Bay Company itself after company officials "had taken note of the success achieved amongst the Canadian Indians". (p. 466, F. & H.). The company believed that by planting such "godliness" in the Indians, "better service in the business of the Company," would result, "and a larger and sounder trade". (p. 466, F. & H.). Four missionaries including Evans, were dispatched to the areas north and west of Superior in 1840, under the direction of the Missionary Committee of the English Conference; they were joined in their work one year later by two Indian evangelists, Peter Jacobs and Henry Steinhauer, and by the veteran missionary, Thomas Hurlburt.

In 1847 the two Methodist bodies operating in Upper Canada reconciled their differences and a reunion of British and Canadian Conferences was effected. This reunion was preceded by extensive conversations between representatives of both conferences, and was brought to completion largely through the diplomatic efforts of John Ryerson and Alison Green, and in spite of the distant coolness of the English Missionary Secretary, Robert Alder. The terms of union remained virtually unchanged from those adopted in 1833. Canadian missions were divided into two categories -- Domestic and Indian -- and grants of £600 and £1,000 were given to the Canadian church for work on Domestic and Indian fields respectively. The Indian and Domestic missions were not designated a separate "District" as had been the case previously, but were incorporated into the ecclesiastical districts (i.e. Toronto, Hamilton, London, etc.) to which they belonged geographically.

The office of General Superintendent of Missions which had been held Stinson in the years 1833 to 1840 was left vacant during the years of division (1840-1847) but revived again at the time of reunion in 1847. Enoch Wood was designated Missionary Superintendent at that time, and he continued to hold the post until 1874 (in 1869 the title of the office was changed to "Mission Secretary"). Wood's territory of supervision, restricted to Upper Canada at the time of his appointment, was expanded in 1853 to include the Hudson's Bay Territory. The work in this field had from 1840 to 1853 been a mission field of the British Conference, and had in no way been linked with the Canada Conference.

During the period 1847 to 1855 the number of Indians associated with the Wesleyan cause had declined; nevertheless, work continued and new fields were opened. In addition to the residential and industrial school at Alderville (opened in the late 1830's), a second school, Mt. Elgin Institution, was established at Munceytown in 1849. Work in the Hudson's Bay Territory in the same interval had, under the British Conference, been neglected, and by 1852, William Mason was left as the only Wesleyan Missionary in this huge expanse of land. In 1854, having received little support from the Wesleyan Conference, Mason transferred his allegiance to the Church of England, and began work for the Church Missionary Society, a body which was operating similar concerns elsewhere in the Northwest. Mason's departure and the transfer of the Hudson's Bay Missions into Canadian hands, triggered action by Canadian Methodists, and in 1854, three missionaries were sent west.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada was further expanded in area and in numbers in 1855 when the Canada: Eastern District united with it. In the same year the Canadian legislature resolved the matter of the Clergy Reserves, long a point of irritation to Methodists and other churches, and the sum of $10,000 was awarded to the Wesleyans on the principle of commutation; the money in turn, was invested by the Missionary Society for the benefit of Canadian missions. From this year forward the Canadian Church gave total direction to missions conducted within its bounds, the English Conference providing an annual grant of progressively smaller size. The grant was discontinued in 1879.

In 1858, the Canadian Church sent out a group of four men, with Ephraim Evans as General Superintendent, to set up Methodist congregations in the British settlements on the Pacific Coast of the continent. In time the Wesleyan Methodist Mission Committee in London voted a grant of £500 toward this work.

AMALGAMATION OF METHODISM IN CANADA

The merging of Eastern and Western Canadian Methodist courts in 1855 was the first of several Methodist unions in the country. From that year forward all Methodist work in the Eastern Provinces, the Canadas, the Hudson's Bay Territory, and British Columbia and Vancouver Island District, was totally the responsibility of the autonomous Wesleyan Methodist Churches in British North America. While Indian mission work declined in importance, domestic missions flourished, and all Conferences grew in numbers. In 1874, the Wesleyan Methodist Churches of Canada, and of Eastern British America, along with the Canada Conference of the Methodist New Connexion, united to form the Methodist Church of Canada. Union of Canadian Methodists was completed in 1884 when three smaller groups -- the Methodist Episcopal Church ^{of} Canada, the Primitive Methodists, and the Bible Christians -- added their strength to the united church to create The Methodist Church (Canada, Newfoundland, and Bermuda).

lengthy report on the state of Newfoundland in 1818-19

* This lengthy report is found on Microfilm, Roll 2, following item 137, and before item 138. It has no number of its own. However, on the index to this roll, item 30 is noted as a letter from "Geo. Cubit, Newfoundland, March, 1819". There is no such item on microfilm, so that it is either missing, or, more likely, it refers to this item found later on the reel.
